

"HEY IT'S HOT IN HERE!!!"

A parked car can quickly turn into a death-trap for an animal left inside for only "a few minutes."

● On a hot summer day, the temperature in your car can reach up to 160°. Your pet can suffer respiratory distress, heat stroke, brain damage, and possible death.

● Leaving the windows "cracked" offers little relief, and can make the animal a target for pet-napping. That short jaunt to the store could cost your best friend immense suffering and ultimately his/her life!

Remember- In many states you may now face criminal charges for leaving an animal in a parked car in extreme heat.

We, at The Animal Love & Loss Network, urge you to leave your animal family members in the cool comfort of home when the temperatures soar. The life you save may be that of your devoted friend and companion.

SOMETHING ELSE YOU CAN DO:

If you see a pet left in a car, get the plate number & ask the store manager to page the person inside the store. You could save a life.
